DEAR BOOK HARVEST FRIENDS AND FAMILY,

In April, as we were all struggling to adjust to a new normal of anxiety and lockdowns, a mom reflected on how she and her eight-year-old son were coping with the isolation they faced:

"We can both go wherever we like in the world just by reading books."

2020 was a brutal year. And, yet, as this mom reminded us, books take us places even when we can't go anywhere. They help us escape from the stresses right in front of us; they serve as a wellspring of comfort, far horizons, and shared experiences; they spark joy and build brains; and, now more than ever, they combat isolation.

2020 affirmed what we at Book Harvest have been doing since 2011. Providing children and families with access to books, in abundance, is the work we strive to do both in a pandemic and in normal times. And along the way, we provide a host of literacy supports to parents so that they are able to enjoy snuggling up with their precious children for bedtime stories – heading off to lands of adventure, exploration, and delight together.

In 2020, with school doors shuttered and with parents heroically juggling roles of worker, teacher, and caregiver, our work compelled us to embrace with a newfound urgency two imperatives: Keep Learning Alive and Keep Parents Connected.

You'll learn more about this work in the pages of this report. But first: thank you. As we raced this year to innovate safe new approaches to delivering books and literacy supports to children and families, we were buoyed and lifted up by YOU – by your book donations, your financial gifts, your volunteer service, your generous expressions of concern, and your unwavering friendship.

We wish you good health, and the power to go wherever you like in the world by reading books.

P.S. Our kids inspired us this year like never before. We were honored and uplifted to receive this note from our friend Davis. His loving advice is something we can all use:

Don't give up. Keep Doing. Change the world. -- Davis

We are heartbroken, but we will always be inspired by the words he left behind.

REMEMBRANCE:
RANDALL KENAN, 1963-2020
This year, Book Harvest lost a dear friend, devoted ally, and passionate advocate. Randall Kenan (right) was part of the Book Harvest family from our very first days. He is pictured here with fellow Authors’ Circle Co-Chair Daniel Wallace at our 2013 Dream Big Book Drive. We are heartbroken, but we will always be inspired by the words he left behind.
Books build brains – and we did not let COVID-19 get in the way of our work to provide easy, free access to an abundance of books for all children!

We opened an all-new Rapid Response Center right next door to our headquarters in Durham, NC to house our Book Bank so that books could be quickly sorted, stickered, and sent into community places and directly to families. We showed up – safely – in places where families could readily access books to ignite their children’s imaginations and fuel their learning. And we collaborated with community partners so that, together, we could keep learning alive with books.

WELL FED, WELL READ
Recognizing that nourishing young brains as well as bodies was more important than ever in 2020, we launched Well Fed, Well Read. Every week, children and their families harvested bags brimming with age-appropriate books, to go along with the meals they received from our community partners.

BOOKS TO CHILD CARE CENTERS
We knew that essential workers who depend on child care centers to keep their very young children safe this year needed one stop to harvest books. We forged new partnerships with child care providers to ensure that the children in their care could take home backpacks of age-appropriate, culturally inclusive books to fuel bedtime stories and home libraries.

BOOKS DIRECTLY TO HOMES
Our Book Babies families continued to receive their bundles of books at home. And since homes became classrooms for every child this year, we provided thousands of books directly to the homes of kindergarten through fifth grade students in partnership with Durham Public Schools.

KEEP LEARNING ALIVE
GRAB-AND-GO BOOKS
The signature program of our Rapid Response Center, Grab-and-Go Books became the destination for families looking for books for their children while schools and libraries were closed. Every week, families pulled up to our Rapid Response Center, and safely, without contact, received bags of age-appropriate books to the delight of their children.

“Thank you! The rapid response during COVID-19 was quick, easy, and gave us something positive to look forward to in these challenging times.”

One Day in September
Superheroes and princesses – masked, of course! – came to share bags of Grab-and-Go books with families. And, WOW, did families show up! Every 48 seconds, a car arrived to pick up bags of books, and, by the end of the afternoon, 281 cars full of young readers had visited us, taking home a whopping 2,944 books!

Parents are their children’s first teacher, brain builder, tech navigator, advocate, and coach. Our parent partners are our north star; they guide us, inspire us, and provide the fuel and energy that create success for their children.

This year, in response to profound educational disruptions, we redoubled our efforts to keep parents connected to the literacy resources and supports that helped them keep learning alive for their children.

LITERACY COACHING

We continued partnering with parents enrolled in Book Babies, our program that provides literacy coaching and lots of books to families over the course of the first five years of their children’s lives. But as soon as it became clear that our regular in-home visits were prohibited by COVID-19, we recreated our Book Babies meetings to virtual platforms. Parents — and children! — were enthusiastic participants — via Zoom, Skype, FaceTime, What’sApp, and more.

“It has been so great to have this option and flexibility, and it’s great that everyone is safe...[our coach] speaks to me like anyone else she has known all of her life, being worthy of respect just like herself. This sets Book Harvest and Book Babies apart from other programs.”

“I learn as much as my child to see the importance of reading.”

PRE-K/KINDERGARTEN TRANSITION COACHING

Pandemic or not: our Book Babies children kept growing and learning this year — and many got ready to enter formal learning environments in Pre-K and kindergarten. Their parents benefited from the expert individualized information and support provided by our Pre-K/K coach so that the first day for every child could be a joyful success.

“The amount of support and resources that are provided is amazing! You help us in many issues about the education of our children.”

“I am thankful for the workshops because they help me get back to the feeling of community that has been lacking and I can connect with other parents from our school.”

CURATED RESOURCES FOR ALL PARENTS

Book Harvest literacy experts offered regular, live, and recorded on-line activities to all parents. “Parent Chats with Wilma” and “Audible with Amy” shared creative brain-building activities that children need most. We provided laptops to families who needed them for connections to school for their children.

FAMILY WORKSHOPS AND FAMILY CHECK-INS

We tirelessly worked to support and connect with parents this year. We piloted a series of workshops with Durham Public Schools and the nationally recognized Springboard Collaborative so that elementary school families could be at-home reading coaches. We regularly checked in with our parent partners — with phone calls, texts, surveys, and focus groups — to listen closely to what they wanted, needed, and enjoyed so that they stayed connected to resources and to each other.
MEMORABLE MOMENTS

In a year defined by challenges, 2020 also provided us with moments to celebrate with our community, families, and children. And we were honored by moments of recognition for the work we continued to do to keep learning alive and keep parents connected.

MIRRORS, WINDOWS, AND SLIDING GLASS DOORS

Just before the passing of U.S. Representative John Lewis, a friend of Book Harvest donated 10 copies of The March Trilogy, the graphic novel series that shares his heroic life story. It is one of the many books on our wish list, inspired by Dr. Rudine Sims Bishop who reminds us that books must serve as “mirrors, windows, and sliding glass doors”, so that all children see themselves in the pages of a book, glimpse the lives of others, and honor all backgrounds.

The very first children to receive a copy of the book are pictured here in a photo sent to us by their mother. When we shared the photo with our donor friend, she responded:

“I am so thrilled that these girls received the book! I know we have some future Congressmen and Congresswomen in the Triangle right now; future non-profit executives and civil rights activists and community organizers, CEOs, lawyers, doctors, teachers, artists, musicians and others who are going to find a way to change the world. Hopefully they keep seeing messages that they can be the hero of the story.”

DREAM BIG 2020

On January 20, 2020 – before COVID-19 struck – we marked MLK Day with DREAM BIG, our ninth annual community-wide celebration of books for all children. More than 1,100 friends gathered together at Rhythms Live Music Hall in Durham to donate books, volunteer, participate in family activities, meet favorite mascots, and celebrate kids, books, and reading.

Thousands of generous book donors contributed 42,138 books that day – books that have since found their way into the hands, homes, and hearts of local children and families. The volunteer leadership of 74 book drives captains and the generosity of 75 sponsors made our ninth annual DREAM BIG an unforgettable event!
